taken some wise saving and investment decisions earlier, you could also probably be entering the golden phase of your life.

Responsibilities done with, health still on your side, enough wealth – and the world is ready to welcome you with open arms. Travel, see the world, see its different perspectives, feel the beauty in the diversity of mankind. And of course, if you had not done it till now, make sure that your long pending passion is your profession now, and you are loving to earn while you enjoy and love what you do.

While all that is happening, keep a tab on your portfolio asset allocation regularly. You still have 30 more years to enjoy life. You need to take care of your money. You would probably do well to reduce your equity/real estate allocation and move them to more regular income based investments.

Figure 6.4 below shows a typical portfolio asset allocation for a person in the age group of 40 to 60 years.

Fig 6.4 : Portfolio Asset Allocation for age group between 40 to 60 years

Age greater than 60 years

This is the phase of your life where you slowly realise that life needs to be wound up as well. You are looking for even more stability in your investments. Your equity and real estate investments which were as high as