Fortunately, car insurance covered the damages.

After doing some research to familiarize himself with the pattern, he found that if he delayed buying a stock until after a breakout, he would increase his chances of success. However, he would also give up part of his gains because the fastest portion of the rise occurs at the start. That was a trade-off he was willing to make.

Dan took an interest in the company shown in Figure 64.7 when he noticed an ascending triangle forming in the stock. “I suspected that the breakout was coming when volume collapsed to 23,400 shares on 19 August. I was right.”

Two days later, on higher volume, price crossed the triangle and peeked out the top. For the next few days, price balanced itself on the top horizontal trendline and waited for demand to send it higher. The decisive breakout occurred on 26 August, even though volume was tepid.
