and intellectual progress. Corrections may be part of the mechanism of life itself. The very ultimate success of life may depend upon the occasional weeding out of those not intelligent enough to prepare, strong enough to fight, benevolent enough to avoid participating in the destruction of others, or unlucky enough to be in the wrong place at the wrong time.

The Wave Principle shows clearly that the ultimate path of human progress is ever upward; it is merely interrupted by periodic setbacks. At this point in human history, such a period will serve to give the United States, and much of the world, a long time to re-evaluate current economic and political "wisdom" and make the fundamental decisions necessary to bring about the changes that will eventually allow the freer citizens of the world to begin building for a new Grand Supercycle advance.

The magnitude of the coming crash and depression will dwarf any previous such difficulty the country has experienced. The resulting calamity will be the single most important influence on your personal and professional life for the duration. It will affect most things that happen to you, that you decide to do, or that you are forced to do. It will affect your business, your professional and personal relationships with other people, your friends and members of your family. If you are part of society, you are going to have to deal with the coming changes one way or another. The question is, will you deal with them from a position of strength and confidence, or will you react in panic along with everybody else? It is important to come to grips with the implications early. If you get your house in order before the new trend begins, you will be able to avoid much of the damage and, in fact, take advantage of the upcoming historic opportunities by calmly making opportunistic decisions when the time comes.

Someday your grandchildren will ask you about the Great Asset Mania. "What was it like when people couldn't get enough stocks and bonds?" "Well," you will reply, "believe it or not, it seemed perfectly normal at the time." Then they will ask you about the statistics. Were there really more stock mutual funds than there were individual stocks on the NYSE and ASE exchanges combined? Did the public actually pour record amounts of money into stock mutual funds month after month even though most stocks were barely rising? Did pension funds really put all the assets they were supposed to protect into transportation stocks yielding a record low 1%, in-
