Take a squiz at the numbers in the chart . . . and follow them down the page from age 23.

You'll see that it jumps $13 000 in just one year, then it's up and up from there.

Remember, you're done saving. That money is growing without you lifting a finger.

While you're in NYC partying. Or painting. Or backpacking through Europe.

And if you can stick with it even further, that's when your life changes. The money starts pouring in, in gushes.

That's when you can truly 'tread your own path'.

Meanwhile, your bully is busting her butt off . . . and she'll never, ever catch up with you.

She's still hundreds of thousands of dollars behind you.

Bullies be gone!

'But I don't have any money to invest?!'

Here's you: Great story, bro . . . but I don't have any money to invest!

Here's me: Yes you do—or you soon will—now you're working. It's called superannuation, or super for short.

(Technically if you're under 18 and work more than 30 hours a week, and earn more than $450 per month, your employer must pay you super. However, super is often paid regardless of these conditions.)

Then your employer will begin taking 9.5 per cent out of every pay and putting it towards your super—basically a retirement fund for you. And the super fund will invest your money for you.

This is money that's already sitting there, compounding away for you.

So you're rich, right?
