Talk through the three steps to success on page:

1. Your teen should find out whether they can switch super funds.
2. If they can't, they should switch into their current fund's high growth option (100 per cent in shares). If they can, they should review the options on page (or research a cheaper fund!) and switch to a low-cost index fund, split fifty-fifty Aussie shares and international shares. Flick through the PDSs for each fund.
3. Remind them to do nothing for at least 30 years—except rollover their super if they switch jobs, and try to move to a low-cost fund whenever they can.

DESSERT:

Order anything you want, because you've both just done a great thing. (Do Mexican restaurants have dessert on their menus? I've only ever had tequila shots.)

Play the Family Legends game:

Do you know . . .

- the story of Mum's or Dad's first investment?
- a regret Mum or Dad has about super?
- what it would have meant for us if we'd had our super sorted at 15?

Finally, do payday (three minutes is all it takes!).

Everyone pitches in and does the dishes.

The power of moments

I spend a good part of my day reading letters from lovely, hard-working older people who are financially screwed.
