Option B: Investing through a Regular Plan

If going solo isn't your thing and you'd rather have some guidance, then the regular plan is your go-to. Regular Plan involves a Mutual Fund Distributor or Agent who will guide you through the whole process. The expense ratio charged in Regular Plans is higher than a Direct Plan.

Also, avoid relying solely on banks for regular plans as they might push plans with higher commissions or from AMC owned by the banks and frequent changes in relationship managers could lead to a not-so-great experience.

But how can I choose the right advisor for long-term success?

To make that easy, I have made a checklist that you can follow:
