£250,000 in over just ten years. That’s a 40 per cent Return on Investment .(ROI) every single year just for buying an average house

We call this ‘leverage’ and this is why so many people get rich almost by .accident through buying property

You may think I am being unrealistic, but remember this is not my opinion. My calculations are based upon what’s happened throughout recent history and history always repeats itself. Let’s face it, even if your investment .doubled after twenty years I am sure you'd still be pretty happy with that

,One of the things my mentor used to always say to me was

”.Capital growth does not pay the bills“

Knowing that your properties are going to skyrocket in value over time and you will become wealthy one day through capital appreciation is pretty exciting. But you cannot sit around waiting for it to happen because we .never know exactly when that will be

However, I have some superb news. In property investment you get paid .twice – once in capital growth and secondly in rental income

Communism does not work

Imagine that as you’ve been reading this book, you’ve got super excited and before finishing the rest of the book you’ve blindly gone and bought a house. Let’s assume you’ve just walked into your local estate agent and asked if you could buy the most recent property the agent has put on the
