annual income; it means that the total value of everything they own minus what they owe is more than $1 million. The majority of them, as we'll see later, have most of their money in basic investments like a company 401(k). Of course, most have already paid off their home mortgage, so the full value of their home is also included in their net worth. Some have invested in real estate, so the value of those properties counts toward their net worth. When your net worth tops $1 million in cash, investments, and assets, congratulations! You're a millionaire. And, as you'll see throughout this book, being a millionaire is more attainable than you ever imagined.
