40–50% till now, will now be trimmed down considering the 100-Age thumb rule, and these will keep reducing as you go along your life.

You are pursing your hobbies and passion full time, travelling the world, and investing in social causes.

Not only you must track your portfolio asset allocation to regularly 'stabilise' the returns, even by compromising on the RoI, but you must also make sure that you have an appropriate strategy and documentation in place so that your wealth goes to the right hands in case of any sudden tragic event in your life.

In our financial freedom planning, we usually assume the last year of life, and usually your wealth would be enough to last atleast till this year, but in life, so many times, we are presented with uncertainities, and we must plan for those uncertainties as far as we can.

You are now looking for your portfolio to not only give regular returns but you are looking for investments that are highly liquid – so that you can get them encashed in case of emergencies.

Figure 6.5 below shows the portfolio asset allocation for an individual in the age group close to 70 years.
