

fear we have. When we were broke, we were most likely afraid we'd never make it or never have enough. Once we make it, however, our fear usually changes to "What if I lose what I've made?" or "Everyone's going to want what I have" or "I'm going to get creamed in taxes." In short, until we get to the root of this issue and dissolve the fear, no amount of money will help.

Of course, given a choice, most of us would rather worry about having money and losing it than not having money at all, but neither are overly enlightened ways to live.

As with those of us driven by fear, many people are motivated to achieve financial success to prove
