

might not be so wonderful. This means they have mixed internal messages about wealth. One part of them gleefully says, “Having more money will make life a lot more fun.” But then another part screams, “Yeah, but I’m going to have to work like a dog! What fun is that?” One part says, “I’ll be able to travel the world.” Then the other part chirps in, “Yeah, and everyone in the world will want a handout.” These mixed messages may seem innocent enough, but in reality, they are one of the major reasons most people never become rich.

You can look at it like this. The universe, which is another way of saying “higher power,” is akin to a