

What happened to the snobs I was sure I was going to meet? I left and went back home to tell my wife we were going to the BBQ.

“Oh, my,” she said, “what will I wear?” “No, honey, you don’t understand,” I said, “these people are incredibly nice and totally informal. Just be who you are.”

We went and that evening met some of the warmest, kindest, most generous, most loving people of our lives. At one point the conversation shifted to a charity drive that one of the guests was heading up. One after another, the checkbooks came out. I couldn’t believe it, I was actually watching a lineup to give this woman money. But each check
