

mutually exclusive, that either you can be rich or you can be happy. Again, this is nothing more than “poor” programming.

People who are rich in every sense of the word understand that you have to have both. Just as you have to have both your arms and your legs, you have to have money and happiness.

You Can Have Your Cake and Eat It Too!

So here’s another major difference between rich people, middle-class people, and poor people:

Rich people believe “You can have your cake and eat it too.”

Middle-class people believe “Cake is too rich, so I’ll only have a little piece.”

Poor people don’t believe they deserve cake, so they order a doughnut, focus on the hole, and wonder why they have “nothing.”

WEALTH PRINCIPLE:

Rich people believe

“You can have your cake and eat it too.”

Middle-class people believe

“Cake is too rich, so I’ll only have a little piece.”

Poor people don’t believe they deserve cake, so they order a doughnut, focus on the hole, and wonder why they have “nothing.”

I ask you, what is the use of having your “cake” if you can’t eat it? What exactly are you supposed to do with it? Put it on your mantel and look at it? Cake is meant to be eaten and enjoyed.

Either/or thinking also trips up people who believe that “if I have more, then someone else will have less.” Again, this is nothing more than fear-based, self-defeating programming. The notion that the wealthy people of the world have and are somehow hoarding all the money, so there’s none left for anyone else, is preposterous. First, this belief assumes that there is a limited supply of money. I’m not an economist, but from what I can see, they just keep printing more of the stuff every
