

end of the line. I guess it worked because the next day he called in with three more registrations. They were all from the East Coast...and they were all coming to Vancouver!

Now that we've addressed convenience, what about discomfort? Why is acting in spite of discomfort so important? Because "comfortable" is where you're at now. If you want to move to a new level in your life, you must break through your comfort zone and practice doing things that are not comfortable.

Let's suppose you are currently leading a level 5 life and you want to move to a level 10 life. Level 5 and below are within your comfort zone, but level 6 and above are outside your box, in your "uncomfort" zone. Meaning, to get to a level 10 life from a level 5 life, you will have to travel through your discomfort zone.

Poor people and most of the middle class are not willing to be uncomfortable. Remember, being comfortable is their biggest priority in life. But let me tell you a secret that only rich and highly successful people know: being comfortable is highly overrated. Being comfortable may make you feel warm, fuzzy, and secure, but it doesn't allow you to grow. To grow as a person you have to expand your comfort zone. The only time you can actually grow is when you are outside your comfort zone.

Let me ask you a question. The first time you tried something new, was it comfortable or uncomfortable? Usually uncomfortable. But what happened afterward? The more you did it, the more comfortable it became, right? That's how it goes. Everything is uncomfortable at the beginning, but if you stick with it and continue, you will eventually move through the discomfort zone and succeed. Then you will have a new, expanded comfort zone, which means you will have become a "bigger" person.

Again, the only time you are actually growing is when you are uncomfortable. From now on, whenever you feel uncomfortable, instead of retreating back into your old comfort zone, pat yourself on the back and say, "I must be growing," and continue moving forward.

WEALTH PRINCIPLE:

The only time you are actually growing is when you are uncomfortable.
