

cash came through. Consequently, at the beginning of each project, we had no money and were in debt up to our eyeballs.

As you can imagine, during this period my dad was not in the best of moods nor was generosity his strong suit. If I asked him for anything that cost even a penny, his standard reply after the usual “What am I, made of money?” was “Are you crazy?” Of course, I wouldn’t get a dime, but what I would get was that “Don’t even think of asking again” glare. I’m sure you know the one.

This scenario would last for about a year or two until the homes were finally sold. Then, we’d be rolling in dough. All of a sudden,
