

On the way, you spot a mad person holding a machine gun in his hand. It is a modern machine gun, and powered cartridges are also attached to the gun. How do you feel now?

Do you still feel the state of bliss in your mind, or do you feel the worst fear ever and run for cover?

It is even scary to imagine the situation. Do you agree?

The same logic applies to trading. A trader might have advanced trading software and an excellent day trading system. But if he fails to control his emotions, it will only create extensive damage to his trading account. There is a high probability of losing all the capital (at least most of the capital) in one day!

This is why highly successful people with good education or even with profitable business start-ups fail terribly when it comes to intraday trading. Because day trading doesn't demand too much intelligence or analytical abilities, all it requires is persistent execution of trades on a trading system (with a positive edge) in a calm manner.

4 Factors of Trading Psychology