

(made during the offline period) and follow the rules diligently in the live market.

Regret

Regret is nothing but a cognitive discord you feel when you make choices you think you shouldn't have made.

Cognitive discord refers to the discomfort that you feel in your mind when you hold on to two contradictory trading thoughts.

Suppose you are holding a long trade, and your system rules say to exit the trade only if it breaks below IB high (of that day). But you see a bearish engulfing pattern at the top, and now you are in a dilemma as to hold or exit the trade.

So, as per the system, you decide to hold. But the price comes back and hits your stop-loss. This experience results in some regret.

In intraday trading, regrets are never-ending. Every day there is a possibility of some regret. Hence, it is better to manage our trades as per the trading system.

Below are some simple techniques to cope with regret:

1. Accept that regret also is an emotion in trading, and nobody can catch all the good moves in the market.
2. Always remember that the market will be there forever, and you can always get a good trade in the future.
3. There is a vast difference between 'a good trade' and 'good trading.' One trade will not build your intraday trading career. So, focus on getting more trades right as per your system.

Hope

Hope in trading psychology is the unrealistic expectation of something very big happening.

Hope is a natural human emotion that comes to traders' minds as soon as they deviate from their trading plan. It looks subtle, but it is the most dangerous emotion, which can result in the mother of all losses.