

- 1) He thinks if a person knows how to buy and sell shares within a trading day using an 'MIS' order, that person knows intraday trading. That's his limited definition of intraday trading!
- 2) He lacks patience and has a closed mindset towards money management and trading psychology. Until he changes this mindset, I doubt he will be able to make money in intraday trading.
- 3) For all these 20 years, he was not doing intraday trading. He is taking some bets every day randomly, based on the thought processes in his mind.

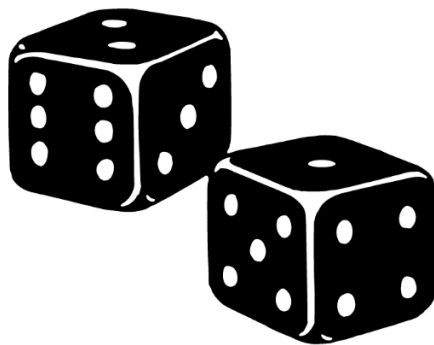

Gambling, online games, and day trading are frequently used in similar sentences. Hence, many people assume they are all the same. There is a famous saying in the trading world:

"Drawing a circle and waiting for a cow to enter is GAMBLING."

Finding a cow and drawing a circle around it is TRADING."

I have no idea who voiced this statement, but it differentiates trading from gambling in a perfect way. I can provide some examples to get more clarity.

IF YOU'RE GUESSING, YOU'RE GAMBLING!

A local vegetable seller who sells vegetables from street-to-street using his pulling cart, buys the vegetables wholesale in the primary market (or from
