

1 – Commitment to the Game

It was December 2006. Virat was 18 years old, and he was playing in a Ranji match, for Delhi, against Karnataka. He was on 40 not out overnight. But his father suffered a heart attack, and passed away. Everyone expected Virat would leave, but to everyone's surprise, he returned to bat, scored a fighting 90 runs, and save the match.

Can you imagine his commitment level?

People come up with many excuses for their lack of commitment to the market. These excuses include job pressure, family issues, lack of infrastructure, lack of education, etc.

But one can have either 'excuses' or 'results' in your life, and you can't have both!

So, if you want results, stop talking about excuses. Because when you don't speak about excuses, your mind will find a way to deal with the problem.

2 – Power of FOCUS

Nowadays we have so many things in our life which can easily distract our mind from achieving our goal. But if you can avoid these distractions and
