

- ° Talk openly with serious partners about money. This doesn't have to be a scary "show me you can keep me in the manner I am accustomed to" or a "I am terrible at money and you should run far away" talk. You can discuss your family's background or what your priorities would be if you suddenly were given $100,000. A hypothetical like the latter can help you get a sense of each other's attitudes toward money.
- ° Money is not super romantic, but it can have a huge impact on relationships. You don't want to wait a long time to find out you have no common ground on which to build a life together.

