

Is it receiving a big-arse cheque at their 21st for a deposit on their first home?

Is it scoring top marks at school and getting into a trophy degree?

I'm here to tell you that it's none of these things.

Besides, you and I both know people who've had all these blessings in life but have still turned out like Paris Hilton.

So, what does make the difference?

You do.

My promise to you

Being a parent is a tough and sometimes thankless job.

It often feels like you're making it up as you go along. Like you should be doing more.

Well, here's my promise to you:

By the end of this book you'll have a simple, no fuss plan that will guarantee that your kids will be confident and smart with money . . . in as little as three minutes a week.

Someday—many years from now, long after you've forgotten this book—my hope is your kids will come to you.

Maybe they'll have kids of their own.

Maybe they'll finally understand some of what you're going through now.

Yet no matter where they are, or what life's thrown at them, ultimately they'll be doing okay.

And they'll thank you for what you did for them today.

Just like I did with my dad.

It wasn't big or flashy.

There was no background music playing, no tears welling up.
