

You should watch it on YouTube, it's very . . . eighties.

There's Jacko in sunglasses and sparkly socks, throwing shade at Diana Ross, who spontaneously tries to kiss him.

(Didn't she know?)

There are some big egos in the room: Lionel Richie, Bob Dylan, Bruce Springsteen (who, legend has it, had been on the squirt with Willie Nelson the night before), Cyndi Lauper and Tina Turner. (No Prince though—he turned it down because he thought it was a terrible song, regardless of the fact that it was for charity.)

All the stars get to sing one line. So they murder their lyrics, adding some 'yeaaaah . . . yeah . . . yeahs' to steal a few more seconds of air time. The song goes for seven freaking minutes.

As a song, it was a big hit.

Heck, I put the song on and tried to do the moonwalk on the vinyl floor while my sister cheered me on.

Yet did we learn that we were the world, the kids who make a brighter day . . . and start giving?
