

Now that you've done this Money Meal, you're probably surprised at how well it went down . . . and how much your kids loved it.

The secret is that you already laid the groundwork for success back in Part I, when you made paying into their Give Jar a weekly habit.

The science shows that the simple habit of maintaining a give jar—used to fund a deliberate act of kindness (like you did in this chapter)—has a powerful, lasting, and brat-breaking effect.

Yet you don't have to stop at this Money Meal. And truth be told, you'll probably find (like many parents) that your kids are the ones who want to keep it going. That's because kindness is addictive—and it can grow into a lifelong habit, that'll keep your kids centered and happy.

But we'll leave the altruism to them for now. It's your turn to be a little selfish—and in the next chapter I'm instead going to show you how to blatantly profit from your kids' hard work . . . and score the laziest $100 you ever earned!

