

‘My 14-year-old has saved $1500 and donated many times to charity’

Sophia McLean, Sydney, NSW

Twelve years ago my husband and I led a very materialistic life.

We had a big house in Bundaberg that was filled with stuff. I was a complete buy-anything-whenever-I-want sort of person. At one point I had 150 pairs of shoes!

Growing up in that sort of environment, our son picked up on our attitudes. We would buy him anything he asked for, and even from an early age he got used to getting whatever he wanted.

Then came the day my husband left me.

Suddenly my world was turned upside down. We could no longer afford to keep up our decadent lifestyle. But despite my circumstances changing, my spending mentality didn't change right away—and neither did my son's materialistic attitude. In fact, it lasted for years.

Thankfully, my best friend introduced me to Barefoot, who taught me to completely change how I thought about money and debt.
