

‘But I can’t teach my kids about money—I don’t know anything about it myself!’

Look, you don’t need any special financial knowledge to raise financially fit kids; that’s what I’m here for.

Besides, my parents didn’t have any knowledge.

My father quit school when he was 16.

However, for the first decade of my life I sat around the family dinner table each night and listened to Mum and Dad talk about their ‘dream home’ . . . a brick veneer four-bedder in Bendigo.

For years my sister and I watched them scrimp and save and strategise. And when we finally moved into that home (with sheets for curtains), to us it may as well have been the Taj Mahal!

My parents showed us what patience, persistence and acting like grown-ups looked like.

Hopefully you’ve been helped along by my last book, but maybe not.

Regardless, this book has been written with the assumption that you have zero financial knowledge.

‘But I’m a single parent.’

I’ve written this book with single parents in mind.

My sister is a single parent, and I know how many balls you have in the air. In fact, I’ve not only had single parents review the book, they’ve helped me develop the plan (hence being able to do it in just three minutes a week!).

I’m going to show you how powerful you really are.

‘But I’m a grandparent. Can I use this book to help influence my grandkids?’

Yes, you can.

I actually see it all the time: a wise grandparent takes on the duty of teaching their grandkids the value of a buck.
