

‘As parents it’s okay if we get most things wrong . . . as long as we get a few big things right.’

And in this book, I’m going to show you exactly what you need to get right.

Together, we’re going to put in place a plan that makes sure your kids don’t have any financial regrets.

I’m going to lay out an incredibly simple plan that will allow your kids to thrive . . .

Regardless of their current age.

Regardless of your current income.

And regardless of your current knowledge of money.

If you’ve always wanted to prepare your child for whatever life throws at them—crazy high house prices, an increasingly automated workforce, or any other financial landmine that might be lying in wait for them—then this book is for you.

No overwhelm, no guilt and no homework

And this is where we do a u-bolt from every other finance or parenting book you’ve ever read.

I’m going to make a promise to you right now: in the pages that follow, there will be no overwhelm, no guilt and definitely no homework.

As a parent myself, I know that each of us (to varying degrees) lives with the guilt that we’re not doing enough to prepare our kids—and I sure as hell am not going to add to it.

Let’s face it . . . parenting is hard enough.

Let me give you an example: one morning I was walking along Collins Street, Melbourne, with my then two-year-old, who was, as always, straggling behind.

‘Hurry up!’ I yelled over my shoulder.
