

6 years (although the longest-serving employee has been with Coles for more than 50 years—and is still on the checkout today).

Minimum hours per week: ‘Most of our teenage team members work between nine and 14 hours a week, fitting around their schoolwork and other commitments.’

How to apply: Register an expression of interest at colescareers.com.au

Leah is a mum of two and does her weekly shop at Coles on a Saturday, so she can experience what customers do. (And shadow shop the new hires.)

Can you give me an inside hack on getting a job at Coles?

‘We welcome high school students over the age of 14, in conjunction with their school, to come and do work experience in one of our supermarkets. Many of our team members completed work experience first and then were offered a role afterwards. Speak with your local Coles store manager to find out how.’

What do you look for in an interview?

‘Being able to explain why you want to work for Coles and why you are passionate about customers, great service and food is what we would look for.’

Is your hiring seasonal?

‘The best thing about working at Coles while studying is that school holidays are often one of the busiest times in our supermarkets, so there’s the opportunity for teenagers to pick up some seasonal work, particularly during Christmas, Easter and long weekends.’

A local business