

(That's actually a huge hack—don't assume that just because a business isn't advertising, or they don't have a sign in their front window, that they're not hiring. The truth is there's always a job for people who are willing to work harder than anyone else. So your teen should print out 20 résumés, comb their hair, make sure their outfit is clean, and visit small businesses near your home. The worst that can happen is they get some exercise!)

Step 2: The Zero to Hero Résumé

Scottina Papina has had a rough time over the last few months. She's applied for heaps of entry-level part-time jobs . . . it's been a taco trainwreck for the poor girl.

Okay, so my motivation in each case was to document and decode different recruitment processes, not to land a job . . . or at least that's my story and I'm sticking to it.

After all, it'd be pretty embarrassing if I actually got rejected from an entry-level job at McDonald's, right?

However, of all the places I applied to, Macca's has the best recruitment process, hands down.

It makes sense: McDonald's is a big business, employing tens of thousands of kids every year. In fact, they're so smart that they don't even make the