

kids do a résumé. Instead, they just draw it out of them.

Well, I'm going to replicate their process for you . . . but better.

See, every employer Scottina encountered—regardless of whether it was Macca's, KFC or a clothing store—essentially asked these five questions:

- Why do you want to work for us?
- When can you work?
- Why should I employ you?
- Are you going to work hard?
- Who can vouch for you?

And I've boiled down the answers to these five questions into a double-page, plug-and-play résumé template your teen can complete in one evening. As you'll see, it's more than just a résumé. Because in the process of putting it together, teens are getting two benefits.

First, they're getting a pre-written 'cheat sheet' they can use as a written script for their Open Book Interview (see Step 3 opposite). Second—and more importantly—they're going to learn stories that will change the way they see themselves.

Honestly, I've coached teens using this résumé, and it is an absolute killer.

The feedback I get is that employers have never seen anything like it. And that's before they've got to Step 3, when they will absolutely ace the interview.

So here's what I want you to do right now:

1. Photocopy the Zero to Hero Résumé on page, or download a copy from my website, barefootinvestor.com/resources.
2. Hand it to your teen—or, if it helps, fold it into a paper plane, open the door and throw it in the direction of the bed.
3. Casually tell them about your 'parental taxi-ranked' suggestions for where they could apply in your area.