

‘Now she’s got the tools—and the confidence—to land her first job.’

Amanda Screen, Ballina, NSW

After making Money Meals our new family tradition (see page), we started working through the Barefoot Ten. When we got to number seven, I had a real proud parenting moment!

My daughter Talaya really wants to be like everyone else and get her first job and earn her own money.

With her acquired brain injury affecting her vision and other areas of her life, she gets anxious about her future. It’s so devastating for her that she can’t do everything her friends can.

So we sat down with the Zero to Hero Résumé.

She was worried she wouldn’t have anything to write down and at first she couldn’t think of any achievements she could share.

But sitting down together with the résumé actually reminded me of things I could ask her. And after some coaxing she remembered an award she’d won at her school that they only give to one student out of a thousand kids.

Suddenly we were talking about why she’d won it . . . she went to every sports carnival and always competed even though she wasn’t going to