

win. She always has a go at everything. And that's what the award was about: being prepared, working hard and being a good role model. These are all qualities that employers look for.

Not only did we unearth some amazing achievements but here we were having a genuine conversation about her strengths and writing them down. Now that she has her first completed résumé she's started applying for casual work.

It's been a dream of hers for a long time to get her first job. Now she's got the tools—and the confidence—to make her dream come true.

And I'm going to be even prouder of her when she does.
