

- the investment account I recommend to save for your kids' future
- how you can brainwash your teen into saving for a home . . . using a serviette
- why buying a car for your kid is financial child abuse.

Plus, I'll lay out a very specific, very practical strategy that will get your kids into their first homes—fast.

And if you're thinking that's impossible . . . you're normal.

The $80 000 handout

'If you put your mind to it, you can achieve anything, Tommy!'

(Well . . . except a house deposit.)

That's what 40 per cent of parents think, according to a 2017 Westpac report on housing affordability.

And that explains why one in four Aussies aged between 24 and 35 now live with their parents.

Remember . . . these are people with beards. (And sex lives.)

So, what can you do?

Most parents' answer is . . . give them a handout. Research from Digital Finance Analytics (DFA) estimates that the number of first home buyers getting a handout from their parents has increased from just 3 per cent six years ago . . . to more than 50 per cent today.

And get this: DFA says that parents are handing over an average of $80 000!

That's how much your kids' friends' parents are shelling out . . . so what are you going to do for your kids, bucko?

Do you even have $80 000?

Truth is, very few parents do, though that doesn't seem to deter them: DFA found that over two-thirds of older homeowners who refinanced homes