

And when they do, they'll probably think you've finally gone off your rocker:

'Awesome! I have $48 in my "House Deposit" account—only $499 952 to go!'

So explain what it's all about. Tell them that when it comes to getting their first home, the ball is on the roof . . . and you're going to give them a ladder to help them get there, if they're willing to climb it.

There's power in starting something, even if achieving it is many years away.

What you're really doing is putting the idea on their radar: you're setting up the ladder and showing them the path they have to climb.
