

We love the Barefoot Ladder strategy to encourage our kids to save up for a house deposit. We've set up investment bonds for each of them, and we plan to use them to match their savings and teach them good behaviours.

But at the same time, we're more conscious than ever that life is about more than the money.

So we saved up and bought a caravan, and went travelling around Australia for three months with the kids!

We've had some amazing experiences: snorkelling with turtles, swimming beneath a waterfall and feeding baby lambs at a farm stay.

The best part is the quality family time we've spent together. We've had a lot of laughs on the road and we're getting to know our kids at a deeper level than ever before.

We don't know what the future holds, but we do know that we're doing our best to model to our kids what's really important—knowing not just the value of money, but also of experiences.

And that's an investment we'll never regret.
