

Everything gets easier from here.

You've taken your first steps—learned the fundamentals—and instilled them in your kids in just three minutes a week.

You've created some magical moments in checking off each of the Barefoot Ten—and armed your kids with the money skills that many people never learn.

And now, we're off and running.

Remember, as a parent you can afford to get a lot of things wrong . . . so long as you get a few big things right.

And by following this plan, you've done everything you possibly can to prepare your children financially for the world that awaits them.

That's why, in this final part of the book, we're going to shift the focus to you.

Yes, you.

Specifically, we're going to focus on the legacy you've built, and how to protect it.

In this final part, we'll cover: