

Clearly, you don't want to go on holidays with anyone who does this. Seriously, they're the sort of people who travel to New Zealand and hide their traveller's cheques in a bum bag.

Instead, what I want you to do is go to Bunnings and buy this bad boy:

It's called a First Alert Fire Safe and Waterproof Protection Chest, and (at the time of writing) it costs $69.

What I like about these chests (other than the fact that they're fireproof and waterproof) is that they're small enough for you to pick up by the handle if you have to evacuate your home.

Here's the thing: we lost everything when our house burned to the ground . . . except our important documents. Having all those docs made the process of rebuilding our financial lives that much easier.

So here's what I want you to do this weekend:

First, go to Bunnings and shell out the $69.

Second, place your Fearless Folder inside the safe, along with your passport and other important documents (see checklist opposite).

Third, choose your own super safe spot that you'll quickly be able to grab it if you have to evacuate.

Finally, and this is important, give your executor the spare key that comes with your chest.

That way your executor (or your backup executor, who doesn't live with you) knows you have a Fearless Folder, and they also have a key to
