

Will you help me?

Parenting is a tough job.

Everyone wants to see their kids succeed.

Yet unless someone gives you a financial road map, how are you supposed to know what to do?

Look, everyone knows that feeding their kids junk food each day is bad . . . but when it comes to how to raise financially strong kids, where do they turn for that common sense advice?

After all, it's not being taught in schools.

And marketers, banks and corporations are finding ever-increasing ways to target kids.

That's why I wrote this book.

And it's also why I wrote it in such a way that anyone can apply it: a single parent on Centrelink payments can do this with their pocket change and a few jam jars. There are deliberately no fancy apps and no specialist knowledge required. All it takes is a bit of time from a caring person.

So, I have a favour to ask of you:

If you got anything out of these pages—if you highlighted or circled anything—please pay it forward and give this book to another parent. Ask them to read it. It could be responsible for changing their entire family tree.

And just like you've done for your kids, the greatest gift you'll give is that their kids will never grow up and say:

'If I knew then what I know now, things would be so different.'

This country desperately needs a financial revolution, and it starts with our kids.
