

I agree.

And when they get a job they should definitely have their own account, ATM card and online banking. Even better, we're going to show them how the banks rip people off with fees, and create a proud parent moment when they select a no-fee, high-interest account. Now that is worth doing.

However, for little kids and tweens we're going to try to lay the foundations, and the best way to do that is the old-fashioned way, by seeing the money.

What about this new online app I've just heard about . . .

You are the killer app.

You're going to create experiences and memories and family traditions that your kids will remember for the rest of their lives. You're teaching your kids values. There's no app that you can outsource this to. You just need to put down your phone and connect with them.

Now let's talk about where your kids are going to get the money to put into those jars . . .
