

The Barefoot Money Meal brings together the best of everything we've discussed so far:

- It offers your kids the benefits of sitting down to a regular meal together, better academic performance, higher self-confidence and improved resilience.
- It follows the time-tested principles of the Japanese honourable mealtime to instil a lifelong work ethic in your kids.
- It serves as the 'anchor' for your new 'three jam jars, three jobs, three minutes' pocket money system—to supply the missing link between hard work, earning and giving/saving/spending.
- And let's be honest, you were already going to eat dinner anyway, right?

Yet as you're reading this you may be thinking: 'Calm down, Barefoot—you haven't met my Marilyn Manson-inspired son. Unless I dish him up a doobie at dinner . . . this is going to be a bloodbath.'

Uh-huh.

I fully appreciate we're not in Kansas anymore, Marilyn.

That's why the Barefoot Money Meals are not only super simple and lots of fun . . . but your kids will even beg you to do them.

Why?

Because it's PAYDAY!

Yet I'm well aware that if this is too hard then you're not going to do it at all, let alone long term (which is where the real power lies).

That's why a Barefoot Money Meal is made up of three super-simple rules that anyone can follow, anywhere, any time—no matter your income, education, financial knowledge, number of kids, or whatever else.

The three rules of Money Meal