

‘Every evening Steve made a point of having dinner at the big long table in their kitchen, discussing books and history and a variety of things. No one ever pulled out an iPad or a computer. The kids did not seem addicted at all to devices.’

The only thing that Steve connected with over his dinner was . . . his kids!

See, for all the amazing tech innovations that help us do more, the ultimate killer app is still within us.

Thankfully, my parents didn’t have a choice . . . and my childhood ‘Money Meals’ involved more time tasting food than Instagramming about it.

And similarly, each weekly Money Meal at our house is a no-screens zone.

And while it’s obviously your choice, that’s what I advise you do for your Money Meals too.

Think of it this way: every moment your kid is on a screen, chances are they’re being influenced by someone who doesn’t care about them nearly as much as you do. By their friends. By social media. By marketers. By an algorithm.

Dinner time is your time. So let’s get into it . . .

Welcome to your first Barefoot Money Meal!

Words can’t express how excited I am for you right now.

People just like you have sat where you are, reading through these pages, getting things in place.

They’ve taken this plan and not only fundamentally changed their children’s futures, but also created a new tradition that has brought them closer as a family.

For all the mundane ‘where’s your backpack, put your shoes on, we’re running late’ that is parenting, you’re going to create moments, share real-
