

In a skyscraper high above the clouds, there's a bank boardroom.

And in that boardroom is my previous book. And the bank's marketing executives throw darts at it. Or they draw glasses on me, and call me horrible names like the 'Bare-arsed Investor'.

Or at least that's what I imagine they might do.

It's fair to say that over the years I've given a lot of stick to the banks. My last book empowered a lot of people to break up with them, and move over to better—zero-fee!—banking.

And that's exactly what we're going to do now. I'm going to show you how I protect my kids from bank robbers, by telling you the exact bank accounts that I use for my kids.

This chapter crosses off our very first Barefoot Ten challenge, 'open a zero-fee, high-interest savings account', and by the end of this chapter, that's exactly what they will have achieved.

Your kids will get a jolt of confidence at having made a smart decision to open an awesome account that will save them thousands of dollars in bank fees. They'll be on the right track. Right from the start.

Even better, I'll give you the teen version of my Serviette Strategy that lays out a straightforward money plan that is so simple your teen will just 'get