My wife says that I suffer ‘anxiety’ about the Commonwealth Bank Dollarmites School Banking Program.

Once we were out for dinner with a couple who told me that they were actually very happy with Dollarmites.

‘At least someone’s teaching our kids about money,’ the husband said.

And then I slammed my fists on the table, jumped to my feet, pierced my chopsticks into my rice, leant over and got right up in their grills, and with smelly black-bean beef breath, I yelled:

‘DON’T YOU TWO SEE THAT YOU’VE SIGNED THEM INTO A MANIPULATIVE CREDIT CARD MARKETING DATABASE?’

And if I’d actually tried to do that, my wife would have leaned over and stabbed me with her chopsticks.

So I just calmly kept on eating my beef and black bean stir-fry.

Letting it all wash over me.

And then, after a few deep breaths, I politely repeated the facts to our lovely dinner companions:

Their financial advisors have ripped off retirees for millions of dollars with fraudulent advice —they even ripped off dead customers, charging advice fees for no service.
