

Oh and their branch staff were caught out scamming school kids' Dollarmites accounts!

BANKING ROYAL COMMISSION

Dollarmites bites: the scandal behind the Commonwealth Bank's junior savings program

Source: The Sydney Morning Herald, 18 May 2018

You've got to hand it to CommBank, their fraud has a kind of . . . circle of life to it, right?

Yet the couple's argument was 'at least someone's teaching our kids about money'.

So let's see what CommBank is actually teaching our kids.

Their 'Start Smart' lessons are often compulsory in 2000 schools across the country. The program includes teaching Grade 3s (eight-year-olds) about credit cards . . . which dovetails nicely with the Dollarmites mascot 'Cred', who's sent into school assemblies and is described as 'a cool dude'.

The Dollarmites school banking program is easily the most successful marketing campaign in Australian history. In fact, one analyst has suggested Dollarmites was worth an astounding $10 billion to the bank.

So you can totally understand why the other banks are as jealous as hell.

In fact, Westpac sniffed an opportunity and tried to get the generational jump on the CBA—by focusing on the foetus, with their 'Bump' account.

(I promise you I am not making this up.)

It's rumoured that ANZ will soon launch a 'Sperm Account' that targets responsible tadpoles who don't want to be caught without ATM access