

Picture this . . .

You've spent the entire weekend helping your 18-year-old pack up their bedroom and box up their belongings.

Finally the moment has arrived to say goodbye.

You walk them to the front door and give them a hug.

You've known this was coming for weeks, but your stomach is still in knots.

It's a pivotal moment in your lives.

They jump in their car, reverse out of the driveway, give you a toot, toot, a wave, and then they're . . .

Gone.

You close the door, walk into your eerily quiet lounge room, sit down and think to yourself:

'Did I do enough to prepare them?'

Sweet Child O' Mine

Look, I don't know you.

And I don't know how long it'll be before you find yourself at your front door saying goodbye to your kids.

But what I do know is that it'll happen a lot quicker than you think.

One moment you're changing their nappies . . . the next they're changing yours.

So, the ultimate question is this:
