

DESSERT:

It's payday! Check the Scoreboard (1 minute), pay your kids (2 minutes), get them to divvy it up into the jam jars (3 minutes).

Then, everyone pitches in and does the dishes.

Money for jam, baby!

Today is a most excellent day.

Your teens now have their own bank accounts . . . and your kids have all earned their very first payday.

After this Money Meal your kids will finally stop acting like squawking seagulls every time you open your wallet or purse.

From this day forward you'll be able to follow my lead and say: 'Why are you asking me to buy it for you? You've got your own money!'

It'll take a while before this message sticks, but they'll eventually understand that if they want something bad enough they can work, save up and buy it themselves. You're also way ahead of most parents when it comes to choosing the very best bank accounts.

Yet, more importantly, you're now doing pocket money the right way: by using the money to ingrain the right behaviours—responsible spending, smart saving and being generous. Remember, where the money goes, the attention flows.

Next up, you're in for a real family treat . . . you're going on a Treasure Hunt!
