

would keep you out of all big bear markets. It would be far from perfect, but workable. Did you ever hear of anyone who ever did this in practical operation? I never did.

For light here let's look at the ancient Greeks. The Greeks were always great favorites of mine and, as you know, they used to have many gods and goddesses; and it was a trick to know which god or goddess to back. You remember Paris had a choice to make, for he had a golden apple to be given to the fairest goddess, and here were three leading goddesses standing in front of him—to whom should he give the apple? Foolishly he gave it to Venus. If he had given it to Athene or even Hera it would have been far better for everyone, including himself, because he already had a devoted girl friend who was far from ugly or ill favored. But he chose Venus and so destroyed his whole family and his whole city and nation because of it. You see, any choosing among gods or goddesses isn't easy. To choose one was to antagonize another. The Hebrews, on the other hand, looked to a single God, just one, and that did make life simpler at the cost of what one may learn or gain or lose through choosing for himself.

There's no one god in the investment world, so how are you going to decide which one of these indicators you are going to pick? . . . I wonder if, in the realm of art, too much thinking may not often be more responsible for trouble than too little thinking. If you will make the thinking that you do so simple as to choose some one "god" among all these technical things—then you have a chance. Remember the words: "Your God is a jealous God," and that is especially true in this kind of work. Various services put much stress on looking at many indicators and [g]oing along with a weighted majority. I submit to you that there's no mathematical way of averaging or weighing your indicators for practical stock market operation.

A violin to me is just wood and a bunch of strings. It takes an artist to play on it. These technical things are nothing but tools—nothing but the violin. They are no good without the player. Now this means that we don't want an
