

years ago, only the most adventurous Americans would invest in places like Spain or Italy. Today, there are billions of American dollars in emerging markets in Latin America and the Pacific Rim. It has always been my inclination to challenge the conventional wisdom. But I do think there is some legitimacy to the idea that many foreign economies will grow faster than the U.S. and that returns from foreign equities markets will trend higher than our own.