

styles, while still in evidence, have since yielded largely to those of the early 1960's, specifically the years 1960–1962; in Wall Street, those were years of transition, moving toward the stock market advance of 1962–1966. In dance and music, the new dominant trends in 1984 were “break dancing” (the 'Eighties equivalent of The Twist, which reigned from 1960 to 1962) and girl singers. What may be important for signaling another mood change is that the dominance of women in pop music appears to have reached an extreme this year. Cyndi Lauper graced the March 4 cover of Newsweek, and on May 27, Madonna made the cover of Time.

Meanwhile, the upbeat love song trend, which began in 1980, is again picking up steam. Bands from the early 'Sixties (such as the Beach Boys) have been touring again. From late 1982 to the present, there have been occasional brief expressions of happy pop music. The message of today's popular music is that the uncertain, corrective phase is nearing its end and that a full-fledged speculative bull market in mood is in the offing.

The 1982–1983 bull market was accompanied by a nostalgia craze.

In films, a fascinating event occurred this month, the release of a movie entitled Return of the Living Dead, billed as a spoof of the zombie horror movies. In other words, it's Abbott & Costello meet the Zombies. The power of horror is dying, strongly suggesting that “Halloween Part 17” and “Friday the 13th, Part 32” will never be made. The newest trend in movie themes is that science and brains are not nerdy, but cool. Films such as Weird Science, My Science Project, Real Genius and computer-oriented adventure stories coincide with a new desire among the young to run computers and manipulate technology, in stark contrast to the values of the late 'Sixties and 'Seventies. These are all hints that better times lie ahead.