

sional trader, it will require a great deal of study to determine which rules make the most sense to you and best fit your temperament and your primary vocation. Whichever they are, once you choose your trading rules, adhere to them. This will require discipline and will test your emotional qualities. Unless you abide by a set of sound trading practices, you will be subject to the whim of every market idiosyncrasy and fall easy prey to the stresses of a given moment. As an extension of this principle, I would caution you not to allow successful speculation to go to your head and cause you to discard your rules. Conversely, if at first you are unsuccessful or suffer a series of defeats, do not despair and discard a sound set of trading principles.

A successful trader who chooses his moves judiciously needs to be correct only 30 to 40 percent of the time.

Futures markets represent financial democracy. They offer an open marketplace for investment and speculation where everyone has a right to an opinion. Some opinions are more qualified than others. How qualified you become depends on you alone. This frontier is still open to a multitude of Americans who have the heart and spirit to learn what it takes. It is one field where the victorious have the satisfaction of knowing they have no one to thank for success except their own intellect, fortitude, and capability. And the reward can certainly justify the effort and risk involved.
