

ten that the commission paid to get back aboard is the cheapest part of any speculative transaction.

Furthermore, I think this system should have some inclusive method of pyramiding, but only on favorable moving markets. No matter how efficient or accurate your trading system may be, I do not believe you can realize its full potential without such a pyramiding feature.

I am mindful that there are undoubtedly people who are already working with or toward such a system, and I believe that those who can put these conditions and features into a practical and viable trading system should be the big winners in the coming campaigns. . . .

I would counsel you to fasten your seat belt and put on your crash helmet.